

A change of nationality through marriage allows in future a woman to take part in the Olympic Games with her new country.

At the Cortina Session, the International Olympic Committee has admitted a new regulation where the married woman is concerned.

That proposal, issued from the Swedish

Olympic Committee, allows a woman, who has previously competed in the Olympic Games, to wear the colours of another nation if she has changed nationality” through marriage.”