

A Princess as President of a National Olympic Committee

For the first time in the history of modern Olympics, a woman will preside over a National Olympic Committee. She is none other than H.R.H. Princess Irene of Greece, who has been called to the presidency of the Greek National Olympic Committee. Her august brother, who has held this position up to the present time, has now succeeded to the throne of Greece, but will, however, remain a member of the International Olympic Committee.

We offer H.R.H. Princess Irene our best wishes for her success.
