Moscow 1980 Official Report

GAMES OF THE XXIIInd OLYMPIAD, in three volumes. Vol 1. Moscow, Tallinn, Leningrad, Kiev, Minsk, 237 pages. Vol. 2 Organisation. 533 pages. Vol. 3 Competitors and Results, 644 pages. Published by Fitzkouloura i sport, Moscow, 1981, in French, English or Russian.

“The Olympic Games are an outstanding event in international sports. They reflect the striving of nations for peace, accord and beauty.”

It was in these terms that Mr. Leonid Brezhnev greeted the competitors and hosts of the Olympic Games of 1980 in Moscow.

The three-volume report of these games reflects this harmonious image through sports. Firstly, the Olympic cities are portrayed : Moscow, Leningrad, Tallinn, Kiev and Minsk. Information on the economic and cultural aspects of these cities are given, along with their respective historical sites and sports facilities. The running of the Games went so smoothly that only after reading the second volume does one get an idea of the immense work that went into its preparation. All of the components of this prodigious organisation are described in detail, from their development to their realisation.

On the subject of the Games, Mr. Ignati Novikov, President of the Organising Committee for the Games of the XXIIInd Olympiad, writes : “Millions of Soviet tourists and hundreds of thousands of foreign visitors and more than one and a half billion television viewers watched gripping sports contests in the arenas of Moscow and the other Olympic cities.” With the third volume of the report, one can relive the action-packed competitions where 36 world records and 74 Olympic records were achieved. All of the results are tabulated and accompanied by magnificent and illustrative photographs.

We congratulate Mr. Ignati Novikov, his colleagues and all those who contributed to the impeccable and efficient performance of the Organising Committee of the Games of the XXIIInd Olympiad.

THE HISTORY OF THE OFFICIAL OLYMPIC POSTERS

by Debbie Barlow Flat 3-Sloane Square House, 3 Holbein Place London SW1 (GBR). 1979 94 pages in English.

Ms. Barlow has undertaken an extremely interesting project. For her thesis in Art History she has traced the development of official as well as unofficial posters since they were first introduced in 1912. She has exposed the different sport themes introduced at each of the Games "according to the changing Art and Design movements of the time". Along with the well-written essay, there are many examples of posters of previous Olympic Games to substantiate her ideas.

medicine, women and the Olympic Games, successful sports careers and their limitations.

This book commences with interviews with Françoise Giroud, Monique Berliou and Marie-Christine De-bourse. The above-mentioned women and various renowned specialists comment on major themes dealing with women and sport. Each of the following subjects are probed by those interviewed: the emancipation of women and their practice of sport, the differentiation between the roles of men and women, the rise of women playing sport, feminine identity in regards to sport, women athletes and

"This is a book in which sports correspondents from one newspaper, the Guardian, look back on people and events of the sporting year and do what they are sometimes unable to do in the scurry to meet deadlines-to write their experience not totally on the spur of the moment but in the context of the season, the year, even the decade." This compilation is an extremely well-written work that depicts the great events of the year, including the effects of television, the emotions of the athletes and the impressions and views of the reporters.
