Coaches, physical education teachers and others connected with sports can no longer ignore the determining influence of meteorological conditions on the practice of sport. Several fragmentary studies have been published in numerous reviews dealing with specific sports. The author here introduces the physical and mathematical research of the known meteorological phenomena, wind, fog, snow, rain, temperature and air density, atmospheric pressure, etc... He specifies the limits in which these natural elements will effect the performing of a sports activity. Other chapters are devoted to the specific application of these physical laws to each sport on the Olympic programme.
