"The Winter Games Retold..."

The photographer Lothar Rübelt recently donated his personal collection to the Olympic Museum. The exceptionally rich and varied collection of this Austrian photographer, spanning ten Olympic Games, is currently enabling the Olympic Museum to present, in its first exhibition of the year, a fascinating history of the Winter Games, where great sporting moments are seen side by side with the most intimate and warm aspects of life in the athletes' village. Now aged 85, Lothar Rübelt is one of the leading figures of this period from 1920 to 1960 during which sport, like photography, became popular, the story of which is told in the following pages.
