

panied by a particular commitment for the current year. Indeed, the twelve NOCs will be present at the Games of the XXV Olympiad, as well as at all the competitions organized by the IFs, within a Unified Team, on the model of the one at the XVI Winter Games in Albertville, plus the NOCs which did not take part there. There will, however, be a change in protocol to emphasize the gain of independence. For team wins, the Olympic hymn and flag will continue to be used, but champions in individual events will have their national flags and hymns. A sporting solution, says the IOC President, H.E. Juan Antonio Samaranch, which protects the interests of the athletes from the former Soviet Union in this Olympic year. The excellent results obtained in Albertville have already provided the best argument in favour of such co-operation.

ARTIST-ATHLETES IN BARCELONA

Open exclusively to practising athletes, The International Athletes in Art Biennial, the Barcelona art competition/exhibition, has its most important edition yet this year when it is staged during the Games.

All entries - paintings, drawings, sculptures - are from Olympians. For the first time, after watching the athletes in action, we will be able to discover their own vision of sport. The IOC and the Generalitat of Catalonia, both patrons of the event, will again offer their prizes.

Visitors will also be able to linger at the exhibition of art on sports themes and work by well-known artists and former Olympic competitors that will run concurrently with the Biennial. The artists include some already familiar to 'Review' readers: Josep Subirachs, Rosa Serra, Yuri Chernov, Jordi Aluma, as well as Vera Caslavskaja and, last but not least, Baron Pierre de Coubertin...

Both exhibitions will be held in the Museu i Centre d'Estudis de l'Esport Dr Melcior Colet. For further details, contact Awarded annually in Paris, the Sports Literature Prize has been given to 'Histoire de la boxe' (History of Boxing) by Alexis Philonenko (Critérion). A professor of philosophy, the prizewinner had chosen to study his great passion. The jury of the French Association of Sports Writers, presided by Mr Bernard Destremau, chose it from the following finalists: 'L'Echappée belle' by Jacques Goddet (Stock), 'Articles de sport' by Jacques Perret (Julliard), 'Le culte de la performance' by Alain Ehrenberg (Calmann-Lévy), 'Roland-Garros', by Gilles Delamare (Dumay) and 'Dans ta foule Ludmilla' (Grand Pont), the novel by Raymond Gafner, IOC Administrateur Délégué.

Mr Bernard Villard, the distinguished secretary general of the association, himself a writer and defender of Olympism, the author notably of a 'Bréviaire olympique' (Olympic Breviary), also notes the attribution to Pierre Villepreux of the 7th Prize for Technique and Sports Teaching for his book 'Rugby', (Denoël) and that of the 46th Sports Administrator's Prize, which went to Alexandre Agopoff, the table tennis pioneer.
