Victorian Football Research Collective

In November 1999, a group of writers, researchers, librarians and academics from six Victorian Universities met to establish a group called the Football Research Collective. Based upon the model of regional chapters operated by the Australian Society for Sports History, the intention of the Collective is to bring together football researchers in Victoria on a regular basis. The group usually meets in the homes of members every six to eight weeks throughout the year, with the aim of providing support, mutual encouragement and critical commentary on current projects being completed in the field of football studies (from all codes). The Collective is affiliated with the international Football Studies Group and also has a close relationship with the Australian Football Heritage Group.

For further information about the Collective and future meeting dates, contact the convener of the group, Rob Hess.
