

Notes on Contributors

Paul Dimeo lectures in sports studies at the University of Stirling. He has co-edited the collection Soccer in South Asia: Empire, Nation, Diaspora (Frank Cass, 2001) and a special issue of Contemporary South Asia on the theme of sports. While his primary research focus has recently been on the history of Indian football, his other interests have included racism in sport, the history of golf in India and the history of doping in sports.

Novy Kapadia has been a football commentator for Star Sports/ESPN since 1996-97 and for the Indian state television channel Doordarshan. During the 2002 World Cup, he worked as a bi-lingual (Hindi and English) football analyst for NDTV/Star News, in an interactive daily programme. Since 1982 he is the Delhi based sports correspondent for The Telegraph, an English-language daily newspaper and Sportsworld magazine. He has covered three World Cup football tournaments, three European football championships, five Asian Games and the Olympics. His articles have been published in scholarly journals abroad and he is editor of India's only annual football journal, the Durand Football Journal. Winner of the Wills award for Excellence in Sports Journalism in 1986, he is also Sports Consultant of the Limca Book of Records.

James Mills is lecturer in modern history at the University of Strathclyde. He works on the social history of the colonial period in South Asia and has published on issues relating to the history of medicine and the history of sport in the region. His publications include Madness, Cannabis and Colonialism: The 'Native Only' Lunatic Asylums of British India, 1857-1900 (Macmillan, 2000) and Soccer in South Asia: Empire, Nation, Diaspora (Frank Cass, 2001). Oxford University Press will publish in 2003 his study of drugs and imperialism under the title Cannabis Britannica: The Social and Political History of Cannabis and British Government, 1800-1928.

Satadru Sen is assistant professor of South Asian history at Washington University in St. Louis, Missouri. He is the author of Disciplining Punishment: Colonialism and Convict Society in the Andaman Islands (Oxford University Press, 2000). He is currently working on a study of the racial construction of Ranjitsinhji.

Amitabha Das Sharma began his career in journalism (1995) as a trainee with the English daily Amrita Bazar Patrika while pursuing a Masters Degree in the same subject at the University of Calcutta. Having completed his studies he joined The Asian Age's New Delhi sports bureau. He came back to the city nearly a year later to work with The Telegraph in 1997. He took up a post with the national daily The Hindu and its sister publication The Sportstar later in 1997. Reporting on football has been his principle area of responsibility wherever he has worked.
