

More Public Courses

The New York Herald-Tribune agrees with GOLF ILLUSTRATED that the four public courses for the great metropolis are wholly inadequate—Chicago has fourteen—and has the following to say editorially on the subject:

"Four public courses for the largest city in the Americas. Four courses, which are so crowded and worn that only the super-optimists of the tribe of golfers patronize them! Golfers are blessed with good memories. They are good entertainers. Some are even generous enough to relate to the uninitiated the story of their good round stroke by stroke, with graphic illustrations of the putt that rimmed the cup. Unless the Mayor prefers to have a committee of golfers wait on him he would do well to summon the park commissioners without delay. A committee of municipal golfers might cut into a day or a week."
