EDITORIAL

With this issue of the JOURNAL OF SPORTS HISTORY, I have completed eleven years of service as Journal Survey Editor under three different editors. I believe the Journal Survey Project has been helpful to the JHS readers. It has kept them informed of the most recent sport history journal literature. It has also enabled some sports historians to develop their research more fully and has inspired others to undertake new research projects. While my role in this process has been limited to editing and organizing the sport history abstracts, the credit and accolade for the success of the Journal Survey Project belong to the ninety journal surveyors who have contributed to this project during the past eleven years. Therefore, I am taking this opportunity to acknowledge each one publicly. In alphabetical order there are:

I am infinitely richer personally for having had the opportunity of working with such a pleasant group dedicated to the cause of sport history, and professionally for having read their materials.

I extend congratulations and good wishes to Angela Lumpkin, the new Journal Survey Editor, and I sincerely hope that her experience will be just as profitable and rewarding as mine.
