

Journal Surveys

II. Australia

II-1 Dabscheck, Braham, "A Man or a Puppet?": The Football Association's 1909 Attempt to Destroy the Association Football Players' Union," The International Journal of the History of Sport, 8, No. 2 (September 1991), 221-238.

In 1909 the Football Association unsuccessfully attempted to destroy English soccer's players' union. The article examines the background, context and eventual resolution of the dispute, which is viewed as a major victory for the players' union. Based on (mainly) primary and secondary sources; 70 notes.

-Braham Dabscheck

II-2 Dabscheck, Braham, "The Professional Cricketers Association of Australia," Sporting Traditions, 8, No. 1 (November 1991), 2-27.

Provides an account of an Australian cricket players' association formed in 1977, to its demise in 1982. Information also provided concerning player earnings and the nature of player administration relations in the 1970s. Based on interviews, primary and secondary sources; 79 notes.

-Braham Dabscheck

II-3 Jobling, Ian and Barham, Pamela, "The Development of Netball and the All-Australia Women's Basketball Association (AAWBBA): 1891-1939," Sporting Traditions, 8, No. 1 (November 1991), 29-48.

Examines the emergence and development of a team sport played and controlled by women. Key dates were the formation of an interstate competition in 1927, and international play against New Zealand in 1938. Based on (mainly) primary and secondary sources; 53 notes.

-Braham Dabscheck

II-4 Lynch, Rob, "Disorder on the Sidelines of Australian Sport," Sporting Traditions, 8, No. 1 (November 1991), 50-75.

Lynch argues that while Australian sport has a history of crowd violence it is at a relatively low level of intensity, and that its roots lie predominantly within broader social processes. Based on secondary sources; 69 notes.

-Braham Dabscheck

II-5 Headon, David, " 'A Conflagration of Conversation and Preparation and Anticipation and Jubilation' -Great Sporting Moments and Memories in Australian Literature," Sporting Traditions, 8, No. 1 (November 1991), 77-93.

In 1895 Mark Twain visited Australia, and commented upon the passion that Australians had for the Melbourne Cup. Headon examines how sport has been extolled, criticised and dissected in Australian literature. Based on (mainly) primary and secondary sources; 28 notes.

-Braham Dabscheck