

Workshops

June Kennard

Towson State University

Our workshops have concerned the social construction of power relations. The sessions are intended for our own personal benefit which includes the fact that as teachers and writers we impart values whether we are aware of it or not. Last year at Workshop #1 at Loyola, 1991, the 55 participants worked on entitlements based on such factors as race, gender, class and age. This year at Dalhousie, 1992, the 25 participants explored the distinction between prejudice and racism and white ownership of racism in ourselves and in our institutions. In 1993, we will experience power relations as classes of people.

NASSH workshop