

NOTES ON THE CONTRIBUTORS

BRAHAM DABSCHECK is a senior lecturer in the Department of Industrial Relations at the University of N.S.W. He has published widely in the area of the economic and industrial relations of professional team sports and in the general area of Australian industrial relations.

KEVIN FEWSTER is Director of the newly-launched South Australian Maritime Museum.

The late RADCLIFFE GRACE O.B.E. was a retired hospital administrator. He was founder and first president of the Australian Cricket Society. His interest in cricket history led to a number of publications, most notably a centenary history of his beloved Camberwell C.C. and a biography of Warwick Armstrong.

BRYAN HAIG is Senior Fellow in the Department of Economics, Research School of Social Sciences at the Australian National University. He is currently working on a major study of Australian consumption estimates since 1910.

PHIL MOSELY is a postgraduate at Sydney University. His nearly finished Ph.D. is on A Social History of Soccer in N.S.W. 1880-1957.

JOHN O'HARA teaches history at the Tasmanian State Institute of Technology. His research interests are in Australian social history, particularly sports history. He has recently completed a doctoral dissertation on the history of gaming and betting in Australia and is an executive member of both the National Association for Gambling Studies and the Australian Society for Sports History.