

NOTES ON CONTRIBUTORS

STEPHEN ALOMES is a Senior Lecturer in Australian Studies at Deakin University, Victoria. His publications include two books on Australian nationalism and the article 'Tales of a Dreamtime: Australian Football as a Secular Religion' (in I Craven, ed, Australian Popular Culture, Cambridge UP, 1994). In 1983 he was co-founder of the Australian Studies Association, now the International Australian Studies Association.

BRETT HUTCHINS is a part-time Lecturer and postgraduate student at the University of Canberra. His thesis on violence in Australian Rugby League is nearing completion. Hutchins has published other work on historical, social and cultural dimensions of rugby league violence.

GREG RYAN is a Lecturer in History at the University of Canterbury. He has published on various aspects of New Zealand rugby and cricket and is currently writing a social history of New Zealand cricket 1840-1914, as well as continuing research relating to Maori rugby and trans-Tasman sporting relations.

CATHERINE SMITH is a Tutor in Pacific and Women's History at Otago University. She is currently writing a Master's student in history at Otago University on the subject of hairdressing as an aspect of cultural and gender history. Smith's article in this issue is based on her BA (Hons) dissertation.

KEVIN B WAMSLEY is Associate Dean (Graduate) and an Associate Professor in the Faculty of Kinesiology, University of Calgary, Canada. His research interests and publications include sport and the state in nineteenth century Canada, the Olympic Games, and theory and methodology in sports history research.