

Notes on Contributors

DREW COTTLE teaches Politics at the University of Western Sydney, Macarthur. He has had a long and despairing obsession in that chimera, Australian socialism, and in the Western Suburbs Rugby League Football Club.

BRAHAM DABSCHECK is an Associate Professor in the School of Industrial Relations at the University of New South Wales. He is editor of the Journal of Industrial Relations and the ASSH Bulletin. He has published extensively in industrial relations, amongst other things specialising in professional team sports.

DAVID HEADON is the Director of the Centre for Australian Culture Studies and teaches in the School of English at University College, ADFA (UNSW). He is a regular commentator for ABC radio on cultural issues, including sport, and his recent publications include Our First Republicans - Selected Writings of John Dunmore Lang, Charles Harpur and Daniel Henry Deniehy, 1840-60 (1998) and Canberra: the Guide (1997).

DAVID KIRK is Professor of Human Movement Studies at the University of Queensland. His current research centres on the social construction of school physical education and university human movement studies. His most recent book, Schooling Bodies: School Practice and Public Discourse 1880-1950 (Leicester University Press, 1998) provides a detailed historical analysis of the emergence of physical training, medical inspection and sport in Australian schools.

DOUANE MACDONALD is Associate Professor of Human Movement Studies at the University of Queensland. Dr Macdonald has published widely on school physical education, health and physical education, teacher professional development and teacher socialisation.

IAN WILKINSON achieved a doctorate in the history of education from Monash University. His research interests lie in the history of the secondary school curriculum in Australia. His history of sport at Caulfield Grammar — The Fields of Play — was published in 1997.